A portion of the Madonna statue was pushed through to the reverse side, and the die had to be returned, setting production of the medallions nearly three weeks behind.

Estes said 750 silver medallions were struck in this initial group, and 1,000 bronze coins were made. More will be manufacturered according to demand.

He said 400 of the silver coins have been sold in advance and the committee hopes to sell nearly five times

Estes said there had also been some requests to have a limited number of the medallions stamped in gold, and that possibility was being investigated.

When Bert Myers went to his first cockfight in 1929, it was a friendly gathering between buddies in his Upland neighborhood.

Fifty years later, he still hasn't lost his love for the sport although he reluctantly sold all his fighting chickens several years ago.

Cockfighting - pitting two roosters armed with lethal metal spurs strapped to their legs in battle to the death - is illegal in most states of the country, including California. Yet the sport has thrived despite the efforts of law enforcement agencies.

Myers, 78, calls himself one of 'the little guys" in the sport, but insists the stakes are sometimes high and participants include "lawyers, doctors and law men.'

"Why even our presidents have done it," said Myers, "Jackson, Lincoln - even George Washington.'

When he first began, Myers said bets ran around 25 cents per fight, but wagers have been known to go into the thousands of dollars. Cockfighting can, for some, be a profitable business.

Myers said trainers have only to take advantage of the rooster's strong sense of territoriality.

'Chickens fight by nature, from the time they're young," he said. "I never trained them that much just gave them good feed and straw on the ground to help strengthen their legs and give them good wind. Just like guys who jump rope or spar to get into shape.

The terms used to describe the style of fighting also sound like boxing - from body punches to haymakers.

The worst thing a gamecock can do is turn tail and run from its competitor. Myers remembered a grey rooster he had that had a tendency

Kentucky has a statute declaring games for profit as illegal, directly affecting the cockfights which tend to draw a gambling crowd.

Locally, cockfights have been known to flourish, despite the efforts of police to weed them out. A case which dragged out over several years in Upland involved a man cited for the possession of fighting chickens and distrubing the peace (a result of the constant crowing of the caged birds).

Officials destroyed all the birds except one which was kept for evidence.

The individual sued, and eventually received a settlement of nearly $4,000 to cover the loss of the birds when it could not be proven they were used for fighting. This was despite the fact the animals' combs and spurs were trimmed, a common practice with game cocks.

Neighborhood complaints were also a deciding factor in Myer's getting out of the business. He at one time had as many as 100 birds, including breeding animals and battle

Boys' club funds re-channeled

The Upland City Council agreed Monday to channel $1,400 in unused funds to help keep the new community center at the Los Olivos housing project open until June.

The council approved the request by a 4-0 vote, despite staff recommendations to postpone appropriating any further money to the project until the 1981-1982 fiscal year. Councilwoman Ina Petokas was not present for the

The $1,400 was the balance of a $3,200 fund allocated to the West End Boys' Club at $800 per quarter beginning last July. When the financially troubled club closed in December, the city retained the money reserved for the rest of the year

The request for the fund came from Xenia "Sam" Szabo, executive director of the Upland Housing Authority which administrates the Los Olivos project.

Szabo told the council the project's newly renovated community center would be forced to close down if additional funds weren't allocated before the end of the fiscal year.

She pointed out it was the only other facility in the city besides the dormant Boys' Club, which provides recreation at no charge to low income families. "We're just asking for money for supplies and

City staff recommended against the decision as

'Since the money was allocated to West End youth, this wouldn't throw the budget out of kilter," argued Councilman Frank Carpenter. "These people are our own — and they're doing a terrific job. I think we should do something to help them over this period of time."

Szabo said the largest chunk of the money would go to cover telephone bills, with another $300 each allocated for office supplies and sports equipment. A total of $140 was set aside for postage and mileage.

In her written proposal to the city, Szabo said the housing authority was caught between the proverbial 'rock and a hard place.'

It's experience - not money - that counts in Paul Bakas' workshop at Dominga High School.

Serving developmentally disabled students and adults, the workshop is designed to provide the training necessary to allow the handicapped to obtain jobs in an outside workshop.

Yet Bakas says the program has had trouble generating as much interest in the business community as he would like

Depending on jobs that industries contract out, the workshop, located near Chaffey High School experience in packaging, assembling, disassembling, sorting, shredding, labeling and other tasks. Bakas explained that many of the tasks might seem menial but each prepares workers for a sheltered

It's tough to find work," he said. "It's hard to convince the community that we can do the job.

To obtain work for the students, Bakas travels around to industries asking if repetitive tasks can be sent to the workshop. Yet on a recent mailing, he received only one response from the 70 requests that went out.

They (businessmen) might be scared that the quality of our work might not be up to expectations," he said. But we check it over and anything we do is as good if not better than the work done by the businesses themselves.

By doing good work for this company, we might get work from another. Word of mouth is our most effective

Much of the training for repetitive tasks consists of 'one-on-one' instruction.

Since some students are adept at one task while others are adept at another, work assignments vary. For example, when the workshop received several 50-gallon drums of assorted nuts and bolts. Some sorted different sizes of bolts while others separated a variety of other items in the drums.

Eventually the task was completed and the workshop received enough money for a trip to Disneyland.

In the afternoon session, students are taught "life skills" they will need to get by in the "outside" world. Spelling, cooking, getting around town and making change are just some of the activities students learn. 'Most of the things we take for granted, they haven't learned yet," Bakas said. But the most important thing is to find work so that those in the workshop can keep busy.

'Staying active even for a normal person means staying more aware," Bakas said. "That way they won't regress. They've got to keep going.

West End not prepared for disaster, group told Albertsons Easter Savings Bring...

By KEN SWART Staff Writer

Is the West End prepared for disaster?

The answer is no, according to Bill Gatlin, a spokesman for the county Office of Emergency Services (OES) in Chino Gatlin, a Lockheed Aircraft executive, spoke on "disaster preparedness" at a meeting of the West End Health Planning Council, at the Visiting Nurses Association office in Montclair.

People are apathetic about preparing for disaster, he said, while agencies responsible for providing services aren't coordinated.

'First of all, the public doesn't care. They always think someone is going to take care of them, so it's 'business as usual.

In terms of preparation, "Most cities and counties, within their own scopes, aren't that bad," Gatlin said. "It's in the integration of services where the breakdown really comes.

The best place to start educating the public and preparing for disasters is with the local health planning council, Gatlin said.

The council is part of the Inland Counties Health Systems Agency (ICHSA), funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Under a 5-year program that ends in 1985, the council is charged with developing a plan to meet the health needs of four counties, said Jose Marquez, ICHSA community resource developer.

But the program may not last until 1985.

Similar councils "are on the plan for elimination by the 'feds' ... if Reagan gets his way," warned Rudy Favila, a member of ICHSA. "That means the local planning is up to us.

Some ICHSA members noted recent research findings indicate the next major earthquake may be centered near San Bernardino.

If an earthquake hit, they said, the resulting damage might cut off the West End from emergency services for 48 hours.

'If an earthquake hit a densely populated area, the ability to survive is only about 7 percent," Gatlin said, "because people, on an individual basis, just don't know how to cope.

His words apparently made an impression.

After Gatlin's brief talk, the council apparently decided their efforts for the year should be focused on disaster preparedness.

Representatives from about a dozen medical and emergency service organizations seemed to agree that people should be better informed about how to prepare for a major disaster.

A need to combat the stress of daily living and improve local mental health services also was mentioned during Ralph Hernandez, director of social services for San Bernardino County Hospital was elected chairman of the council, while Pat Kaufman, a public health nurse, was elected vice chairman.

The council's next meeting was set May 4 at 7 p.m. at the Visiting Nurses Association office, 5156 Holt Blvd.

west of Central Avenue.

Some progress in organizing the council seemed to be made, but several people indicated the meeting got off to a shaky start.

It was billed as a talk on the need for disaster preparedness, but Gatlin never got the chance to give his full presentation, which several residents came to hear.

Instead, most of the time seemed to be taken up with setting goals, defining directions and electing officers for next year.

After waiting an hour to give his presentation, Gatlin told council members, "If you don't know where you're going, all roads lead there.

An Ontario man and his fiancee have pooled their talents to produce an unusual business

They are Richard C. Yust, 23, a former student at San Diego State University, and Samone Joiner, 20, a business major at Cal Poly Pomona.

Their new business is Universal Closets at 2124 S. Grove Ave., Ontario, which installs space-saving units in existing clothes closets and other storage areas.

The units are custom-made, according to Joiner, who designs the units and gives cost estimates while Yust manufactures and installs the Joiner said she can custom design a unit to fit any storage space in a home, office or garage. And she insists that her partner can manufacture and install the unit "in less time than it takes to clean your closets.

She further pointed out that the installation involves no costly construction because only existing closet space is used.

The unit uses adjustable shelves. rods and drawers to provide floorto-ceiling shelving that can easily double the storage capacity in a clothes closet. Joiner said.

She stressed that for the convenience of the homemaker, if the family moves the space-saving unit can be fully disassembled.

She said grand opening discounts of 15 percent are being offered between now and May 1.

Canal vote gets tentative support

The county Board of Supervisors went on record this week supporting a November balloting on the Peripheral Canal referendum, but the board may quickly change its mind once it checks with state Sen. Ruben Ayala.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. has the power to call a special election in November on the Peripheral Canal referendum, which opponents qualified for the ballot by gathering enough signatures last year

However, Avala recently said he favors holding the election in June 1982 because voting then for statewide offices will ensure a greater turnout. A November referendum piggybacking on local elections would draw fewer voters, and opponents would be more likely to go the polls than supporters, Ayala said

Chairman Bob Hammock said Monday, when the board adopted the resolution, that the board's position should be the same as Ayala's, not realizing the senator wants

The resolution came at the request of local Supervisor Robert Townsend.

In other action, the board:

Called for creation of a committee to study the impact on government revenue from Chino's proposal to form a redevelopment agency.

Approved use of the former Colton Justice Court for Municipal Court proceedings. The Justice Court was first merged into the Municipal Court system last year.

- Joined the city of Los Angeles by making San Bernardino County a "planning partner" in the state and federally funded Southern California Earthquake Planning Project. The project will develop detailed plans for earthquake preparedness, and the county will serve as a model for plans elsewhere in the United States.

- Approved a three-month contract between Chino. through the Chino Youth Services Agency, and the county Mental Health Department. The Youth Services Agency will provide treatment for alcohol abuse in the Los Serranos and Glenmeade areas for $6,974, all of the money coming from the state.

Applied for a $48,500 grant from the state Department of Health Services to bolster county maternal health services to Spanish-speaking women.

The county Department of Public Health has prenatal clinics in three cities, including Ontario. Education, nutritional and social services are provided to lowincome, pregnant women.

Of the 1,000 women aided by the program, nearly half speak Spanish, but not English. In Ontario, about 90 percent of the women speak Spanish only.

The grant would fund a full-time position for a health social worker who speaks Spanish and part-time position for a health education specialist who speaks Spanish. Funds would also be used to hire a part-time nutritionist.

Clara Finch, Maurine Massad and Harry Wallis may never have heard the quote, but it befits their lives.

The trio resides at the Sunset Haven retirement home in Upland, and their lives have been and still are filled with music. With enthusiasm, they share their talents with fellow residents.

A sing-a-long is held every second Wednesday of the month, Kate Fitch, recreation director, said, and Mrs. Finch presides at the piano. She has a memorized repertoire of over 100 songs in the "Shine on Harvest Moon" variety. She also can hear a tune and play it by ear.

Mrs. Finch's first love are the classics. Almost every afternoon, she plays these in the living room for the residents.

When she was a young woman in St. Paul, Minn., she played the piano for silent movies in the New Summit Theater. Her career at the keyboard lasted from 1927 to 1931 when the "talkies" took over. Clare went home to South Dakota to work in a

Mrs. Finch has continued to play the piano all her life and is more interested in the classics than the popular or "pop" tunes.

Wallis, "in my 90th year," is a man of rhythm. He is almost perpetual motion as he snaps his fingers and keeps his feet moving.

Every morning, 11 residents join Wallis in a rhythm exercise session. "Everyone has to have a laugh or two," he said in his still obvious English accent. "Everyone has to have rhythm.' "Happy" Harry was born "close

To save energy

Claremont's new/official consults with public on fuel use

By VONNE ROBERTSON Staff Writer

Claremont now has an energy coordinator to help both individuals and commercial developers learn how to better conserve energy

Rick Counihan, a Pomona College graduate with experience in energy conservation at the national level, has joined the city's staff as energy coordinator-planner. The position is relatively new in city government in California, Counihan explained.

In 1980, Claremont amended its Land Use and Development Code by adding three ordinances related to solar energy. They include regulations on solar water heating, solar access protection and exceptions related to solar energy requirements.

A fourth ordinance on solar heating of residential swimming pools was considered but has not been Counihan will work with the city staff and energy committee in developing additional ordinances regarding energy conservation guidelines. He will be in charge of providing energy conservation education programs in the community.

In addition, Counihan will serve as liaison between community groups and utility companies and will attempt to obtain energy-oriented grant funds.

The position is temporary for two years, but may be extended if funding sources are available.

One of my prime jobs will be to help developers meet the requirements of the city's ordinances," explained

A man who practices what he preaches, Counihan conserves fuel by traveling by bicycle to and from his office in the Claremont City Hall.

"While my Pomona College degree is in economics, I served an internship in urban planning and became involved in the solar energy issue," explained Counihan. 'After graduation, I worked for the Solar Energy Research Institute, a national research center funded by the Department of Energy, in Colorado.

Counihan then worked for the National Conference of State Legislators, headquartered in Denver. Here, he researched energy policy issues for all 50 states, covering a wide range of energy sources, from shale to coal and hydro-electric.

At the city level, we can offer the public a great deal of information on how to reduce utility bills for existing structures," stated the coordinator. "A major portion of my time will be devoted to answering questions

According to Counihan, existing residents can reduce untilty bills by conserving on water - especially hot water. Heating costs can be lowered by insulating, weatherstripping doors and windows, storm windows and appropriate landscaping which uses less water or controls sunlight access to structures.

Builders will be assisted in meeting the requirements of the new ordinances, Counihan added.

Contractors are urged to design new construction which incorporates passive solar design. These homes use the orientation of the structure on the lot and the use of windows on the south side and roof overhangs to heat and cool by sunlight. The homes are designed to catch the lower sunlight rays during the winter months and to deflect, by roof overhangs, the more direct overhead rays of the summer sun.

Several developments using solar heating are now in the planning stages in the city, the coordinator noted.

Counhian explained that passive solar design does not refer to collectors on the roof. The design incorporates no moving parts. It may, however, involve floor materials which retain heat from the sun in the day to permit evening heating of a structure.

Solar water heating is required under a city ordinance as a mean of heating water in new developments, except commercial buildings requiring more than one water

No building permit will be issued for new development unless the use of a solar water heater is the principal means of heating water, with the exception of the commercial structures.

Another ordinance is designed to protect existing solar collectors or other solar devices. It states that the devices will be assured sunlight which is unobstructed by w other structures or vegetation for more than 10 percent? of the time

This prohibits anyone from contructing a building wall or other structure or from planting vegetation which would block sunlight from the solar collection sys50 tem of a neighbor.

The third ordinance allows for certain exceptions to the first two ordinances when economic, environmental, social or technological factors make the strict interpresent tation of the ordiances infeasible.

Between church, doctor, a miracle

By LEIGH FENLY Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO - Dr. Stephen Russo enters the swinging doors to obstetrics a little after 7 a.m., time enough to change into faded green scrubs and running shoes before his rounds begin at 8.

He passes a nurse on his way in. The night before, with the staff shorthanded, she - an orthopedic nurse accustomed to bones and joints - had been sent in to help. Russo hears her mutter, "When they put a uterus in a plaster cast, then I'll understand what's going on here."

It is his first indication of what the previous night had held. The second is the look he got from his colleague, the intern on call. Fifteen babies had been born in the last 24 hours - not a record, but it meant the intern hadn't spent the night reading medical journals in the resident's lounge. Three of the 15 infants were born to high-risk diabetic mothers, another to what the staff refers to as a "social problem" - in this case a drug abuser with a penchant for violent rages.

Russo's eyes roam up to the chalkboard: Labor Room 1, pre-eclampsia, Labor Room 2, failed induction, recovery room, eclampsia. The eight high-risk rooms are also occupied. Two tubal ligations scheduled and one Cesarean. From the looks of things the next 24 hours could rival those just past.

At 8 a.m. on the dot, half the Obstetrics - Gynecology residents have clustered around the nurse's station and Larry Cousins, staff gynecologist and faculty member, joins the huddle. Russo, one of four interns added last year to the 16-member residency program, has studied the three-ring binders at the nurse's station. As intern on call, he begins the rundown.

The pregnant women in the labor rooms are no longer case histories to the interns. Through them the new doctors are learning the details of obstetrics, and the 36-hour shifts every three days are part of the training. Faculty members say more interns could be added to the program, but that would diminish each intern's surgical experience, a vital part of the education.

Through the day Russo takes directions from Cousins and the residents, but in routine medicine he is practiced enough to be on his own.

The soft-spoken Cousins uses the cases to explain technique and the literature of obstetrics.

'Insulin,' he cautions the staff in regard to treatment of the diabetic mothers, "is a dangerous drug. It should be used with a full understanding of the consequences.'

The lesson today, if there is to be one, is the treatment of eclampsia. Usually seen in first mothers and middleaged pregnancies, the condition is marked by high blood pressure of such degree that seizures, strokes, liver and kidney damage can occur. The cure most often is delivery

At this moment, in Room 1 is a textbook example: a Vietnamese woman pregnant with her first child, suffering marked blood pressure increases. To arrest its progression and save her from infection, Cousins and the residents agree that a Cesarean section should be done posthaste

But more critical is the situation in the recovery room. 'Mrs. K.," Russo explains, "is 32, 33 weeks. She has a private M.D. and was anticipating a home delivery. We have no prenatal records for her. Five days ago she complained of frontal headaches and her doctor gave her antibiotics for a UTI (urinary tract infection). She's had two deliveries before that were OK. She apparently seizured at home last night and was brought to Mission Bay Hospital by her husband. When she had another seizure in the emergency room they put her on an intravenous line of magnesium. This is her first child by a new husband. The parents are Jehovah Witnesses. They adamantly refuse blood transfusions.

'Nothing could make the circumstance worse," one resident said later. Treatment of eclampsia - delivery, typically by Cesarean - often requires massive blood transfusions. That makes Cesarean, in Mrs. K's case, a poor option. But leaving her untreated is no better. Eclampsia affects the clotting factors in the blood and ultimately deplete the blood supply. One way or the other Mrs. K could bleed to death if she continues to refuse blood

"You would find some people around here who would argue that in such a situation you give them blood anyway," chief resident Lawrence Gill suggests as Russo and Cousins move into Mrs. K's room. "You would find all kinds of philosophies on the subject. Personally I've never watched anybody bleed to death...

Cousins and Russo bend over Mrs. K in a room dwarfed by screens and monitors being read by an anesthesiologist, two nurses, and later a whole team of hematologists. She is lying on her side, her pale red hair matted against the pillow - she is uncomfortable, anxious, fearful, exhausted and her eyes say it all.

Cousins asks that a clotting time be measured, but when her blood still runs free 15 minutes later, it is stopped.

He is the only doctor here experienced in this problem. He slumps in a chair in the nurse's lounge and recalls a previous case where a blood transfusion would have saved man's life. "I was peripherally involved in a case like this where the patient bled to death. I've had the experience and it was unbelievable, horrible. It is not acceptable

Russo suggests threatening to obtain a court order as a means of getting the parents to consent. "I've heard that if you tell Jehovah Witnesses that you are going to get a court order, sometimes they will give in. They think the matter has been taken out of their hands

Cousins mentions it to other residents and a discussion arises over the possiblity of a court order. Mrs. K is the mother of small children, and some residents believe that might sway a judge to grant an order. The decision is made to alert the Ks to the possibility. That at least will give the doctors an indication of the couple's deter-

The conversation takes place in Labor and Delivery's only examination room. Cousins has taken a position straddling a metal stool, when Mr. K enters. He moves about halfway into the room, but stops at Cousin's tone. 'We want to give you our opinion," the doctor tells

"Your wife is in critical condition. Right now she is stable, but is unpredictable how long she will remain stable - a day, 5 to 10 minutes. The baby's condition is very serious. It is not receiving enough oxygen. There are signs of fetal distress. The bottom line is that both the mother and the baby are in serious condition. Your religion is compromising our ability to care for them. We respect your convictions, but let me tell you how it is compromising our ability

'Your wife's bleeding time is prolonged because the toxemia has affected the clotting factors. A Cesarean needs to be done to most quickly reverse her condition. and most quickly remove the infant from a hostile environment

Cousins searched the husband's face for some sign. 'But this cannot be done without blood products. We mention this to you because we don't want to assault you with blood unless you agree.

'There is no question," he replies. "We cannot change this position we've taken.

"If we got a court order?" 'Our feelings are moral and religious. They are not legal or medical. We believe it is a command of God to us as Christians. Even if she should die..

That is a real possibility," Cousins breaks in. Mr. K pales. "If I were lying there instead of her it would be the same.

'Yes, we understand," Cousins says and walks out of

At 6 p.m. Mrs. K's contractions are coming every three minutes, indicating that induction, caused by a drug called Pitocin, has been successful. The fetal heartbeat, while sometimes irregular, is not lapsing.

Russo predicts that the newborn infant's first home will probably be the special - care nursery, "at least for a few days. Her chances of having a healthy baby aren't The mother's condition, however, has encouraged the "She's in a good pattern," Russo explains to Cousins.

'She's looking really good.' But as Mrs. K's condition stabilizes, the relationship between husband and doctors deteriorates. When the hematologists request blood, Mr. K intervenes, questioning the necessity. "I just want to make sure you're doing this for her benefit and not for your own curiosity," he says to Gill. Now pre-delivery lab tests are needed and he balks again. "He is so hostile," a nurse tells Russo. 'Oh, I'll talk to him," he says. Russo is told that he will deliver Mrs. K.

At 7:30 p.m. it is standing room only in the delivery room. In attendance at Mrs. K's right shoulder is the lay midwife who had originally planned to deliver the baby at the Ks' home. The adversary relationship has heightened to the point where Russo's instructions are translated through the midwife. He says "push" and Mrs. K looks to the midwife and asks "Would you?"

'No forceps, no episiotomy," the couple says, apparently unaware that Russo, concerned about her blood clotting problem, would not hazard an episiotomy - an incision of the perineum, usually done to prevent injury to the vagina. Nancy O'Neil tells them not to worry.

With the baby's condition still in question, pediatricians set up an incubator outside in the hall. Mrs. K asks for a mirror, so she may see her baby's head emerge. "Is that it? Is that it?" she cries.

Russo prepares a hypodermic, with the intention of drawing blood from the cord - a standard procedure done in case the newborn needs blood. Mrs. K gasps. "It's just for the baby," O'Neil tells her. "He probably won't need it. It's OK.'

When the child's head pushes through, Russo siphons blood from the child's mouth - over and over again. More pushes and her child's shoulders appear, then his trunk and legs.

'He's gray," she cries, and the others chuckle. "They all look that way," the midwife tells her. An enormous amount of blood gushes from Mrs. K onto the floor.

Although the mother had asked to be given the child right away - she intended to breast feed immediately -Russo hands the child to the pediatricians.

"It is a strong baby boy. It looks healthy," one of them announces as they examine the child. Mr. K sighs in relief. A moment later the mother is handed her child, and she asks that the lights be turned off. Russo goes to change his shoes.

With Mrs. K, we got a break," said Russo. 'Sometimes we get lucky or - depending on which way you look at it - God steps in.

Basketball is a game of skill, strength and coordination. For members of the Casa Colina Condors, it also takes a special type of determination.

The Condors are one of more than 150 teams in the National Wheelchair Basketball Association. Its members range from paraplegics to amputees, but all share the conviction a disability does not mean inability.

The Condors are an extension of the Community Wheelchair Sports program initiated in 1978 by the Casa Colina Hospital for Rehabilitative Medicine. In addition to basketball, the Pomona facility features track and field, swimming, tennis, table tennis, bowling and other sports Wheelchair basketball follows NCAA rules with a minimum number of concessions made to the athletes' physical status.

The chair is considered part of the player, and is treated like an arm or leg in any charging, blocking or out-of-bounds calls.

A basic rule which is strictly enforced requires players to remain firmly seated in the chair at all times. Since the disabilities range widely in severity, anyone who partially stands on a functional leg or leg stump is charged with a physical advantage foul. The opposing team is awarded a free throw, and any player with three such fouls is disqualified from the rest of the game.

Condor team members come from as far away as Riverside and Anaheim, with most from the Pomona Valley area. Some have participated in the sport season after season, like 24-year-veteran Domingo Melendez of Ful-

The Condors have had a successful season. They played and won the regional play-offs in Tucson two weeks ago, and are playing in the NWBA championships in Detroit this weekend.

The Casa Colina wheelchair sports program serves two purposes — to provide an opportunity for competitive sports for the disabled; and to educate the public on the abilities and achievements of the disabled, rather than focus on the disability itself.

Claremont City Council OKs schedule for Cambridge Square redevelopment

By VONNE ROBERTSON Staff Writer

The Claremont City Council, acting through its Redevelopment Agency, Tuesday approved a proposed schedule for the redevelopment of Cambridge Square.

The shopping center at the corner of Indian Hill Boulevard and Arrow Highway was included in the city's redevelopment program recently in an attempt to upgrade and find new tenants for the center. The major tenant, a Safeway store, closed about a year ago.

The agency adopted a proposed schedule which sets an April 21 deadline for the property owners to submit their qualifications as developer entities. In addition, the property owners are expected to submit their specific development proposals on or before May 28, according to the agency criteria adopted.

Owners of the major portion of the property, Halbern and King Enterprises of Beverly Hills, protested the April 21 deadline to submit their qualifications, which include proof of financial ability

According to Julian Halbern, these owners want to participate in the redevelopment but need to secure appraisals of the parcel. He said they resent the fact that the city is presently obtaining an appraisal but has stated it will not make the facts available to the own-

Outside the council chambers, Halbern said he'd contacted nearly 75 developers about participating in the remodeling of the center, including constructing a major market.

Many were interested until they learned that a new Alpha Beta market is about to be constructed just a half male south of our land, also on Indian Hill Boulevard," he said.

The five or six developers still interested say they want to see an estimate of the value of the property. We feel the city should either share the information on their appraisal with us or allow us extra time to secure our own.

City Manager Len Wood said the city initiated the appraisal of the land based upon a previous impression that the owners were not interested in participating in the redevelopment. In that case, the Redevelopment Agency would need an appraisal if it were to purchase the property from the owners.

Councilman Stuart Wahrenbrock requested that the appraisal be kept confidential in the event that the city does later enter into a purchasing negotiation with the owners for proper towing company, McGrady's friend was horrified to discover it would cost $75 to get his car back. "I went to the (apartment management office) the next day and asked why the business hours weren't posted so he would know if it was OK to park there," said McGrady. "It turns out you have to check on the office door.

He's stockpiled nearly 10,000 hubcaps in the stores catalogued, cleaned and displayed.

"It's not visible from the parking area, and all seemed unfair to me. McGrady and his friend didn't know if they'd been cheated or not. As in all business, many towing firms are legitimate. But according to Capt. Jim Perkins of the California Highway Patrol, there is always need for the consumer to be cautious and on the lookout for those handful of operators who are out to take advantage of the public

"If a person is calling for a tow truck, he should always ask the rate and charges that will be incurred before having a man come out,' said Perkins. "And if at all possible, there should also be a witness.

He said law requires that rates be posted either in the truck itself, in the business or in both locations.

'We find that in most cases the public is prone to be slow in asking the rates," said Perkins. "And if they don't ask - well, very often they end up being very surprised." He said the going rate for a simple tow to the nearest service station runs from $25 to $40, but that additional charges may be added for any special services, including tire changes, winching or excessive

There is generally also a storage fee, so Perkins encouraged those whose cars are impounded to retrieve the vehicle as soon as possible to avoid excessive accumulated

He said anyone who suspects his car has been towed should first contact the local law enforcement agency. All private property owners must inform the police or highway patrol when having a car impounded, and dispatchers will be able to tell the car owner if the vehicle has been towed and where it may be located.

The California Vehicle Code authorizes private property owners to have unauthorized cars towed, provided a sign is posted in accordance with regulations.

Many towing firms shy away from private property impounding. Too often, said Perkins, incensed car owners cause problems either during the impoundment or following retrieval.

"It's become standard operating procedure for a tow service to (answer an impounding call) with lights out to avoid attracting a crowd," said Perkins. "I feel for the tow service on those - in many cases you're fighting a losing battle. "In those cases, it just pays for the driver to park where he's supposed to park. John Cotten, manager of contract station relations for the Automobile Club of California in the San Bernardino-Riverside area, said his company generally does not deal with impound cases unless the club member's car was disabled, resulting in its being parked in a restricted spot.

His company contracts with 74 towing firms in a four-county area on a yearly basis.

"We worry about our reputation," he said. "If there is a problem, the member should contact us, and we can usually resolve it." He said canceling contracts is relatively unusual however

Perkins said consumers who feel they have been treated unfairly by a tow firm have several options.

Complaints can be filed with the Consumer Affairs Bureau in Los Angeles or the Better Business Bureau in Colton. If the consumer can prove the firm violated the law. such as by not posting prices, the matter can then be taken to the district attorney

"If they feel the price is exorbitant, they can go to civil action," he said. "If they can prove unusual charges with proof showing it's not within reason (by comparing with fees for other firms) they can go to small claims court.

He said he was "not surprised" to hear reports of firms who add the insult of kicking prices up even further if the customer complains, but said such problems could be avoided by dealing with reputable

"In all, I still say it's important for people to check," he said. "Ask what the prices are - and you won't have any bad surprises.

Adventurous windjamming across the Caribbean

Copley News Service Somewhere around us, here in the British Virgin Islands, those stoic descendants of the once - great British Empire were probably taking tea.

But we - on the open deck of a wind-teased French barkentine, sailing the Caribbean in the water - logged footsteps of Henry Morgan and Sir Francis Drake — we had the Swizzle

Ah, the Swizzle — fruit juices, rums and liqueurs flung together buccaneer-style in a 20-gallon aluminum drum. Guzzled, not sipped, as the sun slipped drunkenly over

The perfect capper for a day of lying in the sun on the white beaches of an idyllic little uninhabited island call-

Remembering yesterday: climbing a rocky outcropping on Salt Island to catch a faint glimpse of the seaburied remains of the old steam packet Rhone, which lost a race with a hurricane a century before.

It is all what's known as a Windjammer cruise. Sailing the Caribbean for six days on the wooden deck of an old sailing ship, bouncing from island to island with four score other passengers.

Nights of dancing on the deck, or at a beach party ashore. Days of swimming, lounging on the beach, exploring the jungles or climbing the rocks. Windjamming

A casual enough affair. The uniform is cutoffs or bathing suit. No social directors. No room service. Dressing for dinner is putting on your tennies.

It is not "Love Boat." It is "Gilligan's Island" adrift. The mood is light, relaxed and easygoing. Accommodations are sparse but comfortable, not encouraging one to stay below decks. The food, heightened by the open air, is excellent.

And in the Caribbean, it is a year-round adventure. The idea began in the 1940s when Mike Burke, with his Navy muster-out pay, dreamed of buying up the rusted, decaying, forgotten remains of the outdated siling ships and restoring them for a new mission. With the great canvases billowing above, the old ships leave their various Caribbean home ports with 70 to 126 passengers aboard to drop anchor at the islands.

Freeport. Nassau. Antigua. Martinique. Bimini. My choice was the British Virgin Islands. As getaway vacations go, it is a collection of largely unheralded, uninhabited or sparsely inhabited islands.

Tortola — the principal island. Virgini Gorda — home of a unique place called The Baths. Sandy Cay - uninhabited, owned by Laurence Rockefeller and replanted into a nature preserve. Norman Island — which folklore says is Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island." Beef Island. Salt Island. More.

Simply small harbors, deserted beaches, green mountains, undersea gardens. Peaceful and quiet.

At Road Town, Tortola, we climbed aboard the restored 208-foot one-time French cadet ship Flying Cloud on a Monday night to find what most resembles a Southern California beach party already going strong.

We went to see it in the afternoon.

On Salt Island, with its 12 inhabitants who make their living by distilling salt from two ponds, we met Beatrice, who is 76, and Clementine, who is 69. They are the local Welcome Wagon.

Once, long ago, they were invited aboard the royal yacht Brittania to meet the queen and they will sit on the beach, poring over a yellowed scrapbook filled with pictures of that day, telling visitors all about it.

One of the real delights was a deckside ritual of Storytime as we gathered to hear Capt. John Wallander, 28, tanned and good-looking, tell us the what and when of the day in his slow, dry, British style.

And there was that gloomy Wednesday off Virgin Gorda, after two days of rain, as he looked out over his 80 drenched and restless passengers.

The appointment of Allen, 37, an associate professor of government at Harvey Mudd College, was approved by the school board on a 3-0 vote. Trustee
